

I do not want the do not call list law weakened. If I want something, I have no problem with picking up the phone and ordering it, however I don't appreciate having to pick up the phone while someone reads a script about something I have no interest in. If you tell the telemarketer that you are not interested, they will offer a pre written argument about why I need the product. Especially annoying is the aspect of so called trial purchases where an action on my part is required to cancel the membership, etc after the trial period and I am automatically billed. It is made difficult to cancel the purchase, you don't always get back all of the money, or you are continuously billed from year to year without asking permission first.
